RIGHT TO INFORMATION ACT IN INDIA

Right to Information is a recognised legal right of every individual of our nation. For realisation of this right, the legislation was enacted in the year 2005- The Right to Information Act, 2005. The Act has been a viable tool through which the general public has been not only seeking information, records and clarifications from public authorities on various public dealings and transactions but also obligating the authorities to ensure transparency and accountability in public administration and governance. There has been introduction of various rules laying down the procedure of appeal, complain or second appeal with the commission. Legislations like the Right to Information Act, 2005 are also known as social legislations. While the process is smoother for individuals for access to information, there are roadblocks which are faced by the Information Seekers as well as the Information Providers. Moreover, given the dynamic content of the legislation, there are changes and improvements which can be understood by practice.

ABOUT THE SUMMER COURSE

The summer course will be conducted by eminent academicians, administrators and officials who have dealt with the nuances of the Legislation both at the Central and the State level. During this summer course participants will be actively engaged in the classroom through lectures, case studies and other modes of intelligent teaching on Right to Information and allied laws in the country. The participants are expected to have gained exceptional understanding on the topic of the course including the following outcomes:

- A sound knowledge of the provisions of the RTI Act, 2005 with practical experience on the subject;
- Good understanding of the roles and responsibilities of organisations / persons concerned with implementing the law and with enforcing the rights under this law;
- Proper appreciation of rights / obligations - as applicable - for effective use of this right;
- Reliable guidance on following the right process / procedure to implement the provisions of this Act and to benefit from this Act;
- Good understanding of remedies available when an implementing organisation fails to comply with this Act;
- Testing the understanding of 'Information Providers' and 'Information Seekers' using this tool for implementing this Act or exercising their right under it.

This Summer Course is aimed for:
